PARLACI DELLA TUA RICERCA

My project is # KnowingDOM - "Law, Economy and Seeing Woman's Work: Knowledge Production and the ILO's Domestic Workers Convention in Global Migration Governance." This new research will investigate how various actors engage the International Labor Organization in making knowledge claims about domestic work and how the ILO's norm-setting activities disseminate to and from the European Union. Specifically, it will look into how what we know about domestic work has developed in the context of the establishment of the ILO's Convention on Domestic Work (C189). The project draws from notions of the sociality of knowledge production in feminist science studies. The latter attend to different sources of epistemic authority, including voices 'from below.'

I am trained in international relations, although my research draws from feminist political economy, political theory, and migration studies. I have been working within the ambit of global migration governance, notably the role of intermediaries (the 'migration industry') in shaping globalizing markets in domestic work. I am interested in international relations theory, interpretive research methods, and feminist epistemology. Apart from academic work, I have worked on projects in the non-profit sector on topics as diverse as reproductive health, indigenous land rights, and gender and natural disasters.

RACCONTA UNA TUA GIORNATA TIPO AL LAVORO

While I am a qualitative scholar who likes to go on fieldwork - getting access, interviewing respondents, and doing participant observation - most of my days are actually spent sitting in front of the computer - reading, coding, writing, transcribing, making notes. I do not have teaching duties with my current position - but when I do teach, my typical day also includes preparing for class (writing lecture notes, making PPTs), responding to emails, marking papers/essays and talking with students. As a lecturer you could also have administrative or service work for your department (sometimes even your faculty).

HOBBIES E TEMPO LIBERO

I like watching films and TV series (all kinds) and going for long walks/hikes in nature.

UN OGGETTO DA PORTARE CON TE IN MISSIONE

My mobile phone is handy for orienting myself in places I do not know well.

LIBRO PREFERITO

Hermeneutics of the Subject (Michel Foucault) inspired me and my work when I was reading it while on fieldwork in Malaysia back in 2013. I still revisit it from time to time.

FILM PREFERITO

I have seen Le Fabuleux Destin d'Amelie Poulin at least 20 times.
